"Lianyungang, a booming port city, has China's most extreme gender ratio for children under four: 163 boys for every 100 girls. These numbers don't seem terribly grim, but in ten years, the skewed sex ratio will pose a colossal challenge. By the time those children reach adulthood, their generation will have twenty-four million more men than women. The prognosis for China's neighbors is no less bleak: Asia now has 163 million females "missing" from its population. Gender imbalance reaches far beyond Asia, affecting Georgia, Eastern Europe, and cities in the U.S. where there are significant immigrant populations. The world, therefore, is becoming increasingly male, and this mismatch is likely to create profound social upheaval.

Historically, eras in which there have been an excess of men have produced periods of violent conflict and instability. Mara Hvistendahl has written a stunning, impeccably-researched book that does not flinch from examining not only the consequences of the misbegotten policies of sex selection but Western complicity with them"--

Pakistan, with a population of 139 million in 2000, is the seventh most populous country in the world. The historical trends indicate a continuous and exponentially increasing growth in population because of sustained high fertility and declining mortality. Currently the population is growing at around 2.2 percent per annum, one of the highest rates of growth (after Nigeria) in the world. In Pakistan, the contraceptive prevalence is still low (24 percent) and fertility level (TFR 5.0) is among the highest in the world. There has been only a marginal decline in fertility in Pakistan in the last two and a half decades. An average married woman in Pakistan still experiences a total of at least seven children if she survives and completes her reproductive periods. Pakistan was amongst the pioneering countries to launch a family planning program in the public sector forty years ago (1960s) but unlike many other less developed countries having success stories in family planning, it has not yet achieved widespread acceleration of adoption of family planning measures. The purpose of this paper is to evaluate the impact of women work participation, female age at marriage, female literacy rate, sex ratio and infant mortality rate on high crude birth rate districts of Pakistan by using data from 1998 population census. A multiple regression model is used for analyzing the data. The results of the analysis reveal that all the variables which are included in the model are equally important. Female age at marriage and female literacy are significant and negatively related to birth rate, while sex ratio and infant mortality rate are statistically significant and positively related to birth rate. Women's work participation is also positive but statistically insignificant.

Basic Demographic Measures - John Saunders 1988

This book is a ready reference and a free-standing text for those who want to understand the measures without plowing through detailed and lengthy explanations of sources of data, international comparisons and, in general, the nuances of the subject matter. It is aimed at the beginner and at the professional who would like a ready reference to these measures and presumes no knowledge of mathematics beyond basic arithmetic and no prior knowledge of demography. The uniqueness of this volume lies in the detailed step-by-step exposition of the calculation of all of these measures in one volume, supplemented by graphs which illustrate significant points. There are 31 tables and 8 figures, yet the volume is small and easy to use. Exercises and answers are provided.

What Explains Sex Ratio at Birth - Siddhartha Mitra 2007

This paper tries to investigate the ultimate socio-economic determinants of the sex ratio at birth in the Indian case. A sex ratio at birth which is biased against female births can result in gender imbalance which in turn can have grave implications for society in the form of social unrest, demand driven increase in prostitution, kidnappings of women etc. Our study of the Indian case reveals that female literacy and share of rural population in total population affect sex ratio at birth, defined as the number of female births per 1000 male births, negatively whereas fertility rate affects it positively. This confirms suspicions voiced by other academicians that mere increase in female literacy might make women more effective agents of discrimination against female births. What is needed is targeted education which makes both men and women more accepting of female births. Poverty and religion were not found to be significant determinants of the sex ratio at birth.
