Analysis of Human Body Language During a Lie - Amir Afifi 2019

Lying plays a big part in our society, everyone does it at least once a day, and sometimes much harm can be produced. This paper is about the body language and if there are any signs to detect lies from it. The body language which includes gestures, facial expressions, posture and movements, falls into the category of the nonverbal behaviors. There were to experiments executed, one with a questionnaire where the probands had to lie within two or three questions and a story telling part with one fictional story. Two runs were realized and one of them with a masking. The masking was done, that the probands did not know that I knew that they were lying which was closer to a real-life situation. The main deception clues found were the lip compression, smiling or trying to prevent one, a step back and a glimpse to the floor. However, it is very important to not judge someone just from the found deception clues but look out for the changes in the behavior of a person. It is absolutely necessary that you first create a baseline of a person and then look out for the changes. If this is not done, huge misjudgments will be made due to the idiosyncratic nonverbal behaviors of a person.
