Loving in the Grown Zone Zara D. Green and Alfred A. Edmond Jr. 2014-10-29 Too many people have surrendered to the belief that dissatisfaction, neglect, infidelity, abuse, disrespect, conflict, exploitation and betrayal are natural, normal, and unavoidable characteristics of romantic relationships and even marriage. We are presented with a choice: relationships that don't last and relationships that do, as long as participants are willing to endure inevitable suffering, mistreatment, and victimization, usually at the hands of one another. Loving in the Grown Zone is a rejection of that thinking. It is testament to the authors' belief that while there may be no such thing as a perfect relationship, that is not justification for accepting anything less than healthy relationships. No one is required to accept mistreatment as the price of a loving, safe, and sustainable relationship of honor, esteem, and respect. Furthermore, establishing such healthy, resilient, and fulfilling relationships are not a matter of luck or chance, but of intention, learnable skills and practices, and commitment to personal growth. Loving in the Grown Zone urges you to learn those skills and commit to those practices, including recognizing the difference between the attractors that motivate us to initiate romantic relationships and the sustainers required to ensure that such relationships are healthy, safe, and affirming for both partners.

Adolescent Romantic Relationships as Precursors of Healthy Adult Marriages Benjamin R. Karney 2007 Policymakers are interested in promoting healthy marriages in adulthood by providing services to strengthen the adolescent precursors of healthy marriage, especially within low-income populations. But if programs and curricula targeting adolescent romantic relationships are to be effective, they must be grounded in an accurate understanding of how adolescent relationships function and the role that they play in the development of healthy adult marriages. This report evaluates the current landscape of theory, research, and interventions addressing the role of adolescent romantic relationships in the development of healthy adult marriages. Drawing on a thorough review of the existing theoretical and empirical literature in this area, as well as interviews with practitioners directly involved with developing or administering relationship education to adolescents, the authors bring together relevant research and theory from a wide range of disciplines that have examined these issues, and suggest future directions for research and intervention. In particular, they note that although research describing romantic relationships in low-income populations is sparse, there are already-existing nationally representative data sets that include data from substantial numbers of well-sampled low-income adolescents. Analyses of these data would have relatively low cost and a potentially high yield for informing policies that target low-income youth.

Society's Influences on Decision-Making for Adolescents Regarding Romantic Relationships Emily Trapp 2018 Adolescence is an important time in the formation and exploration of romantic relationships (Furman, 2002). Due to this, some may consider this to be an important time period to promote healthy sexual and relationship attitudes, beliefs and behaviors. Additionally, romantic relationships among adolescents are found to lack research compared to those of adults, showing the need for more studies to be conducted among this population (Whittaker, Alder-Baeder & Garneau, 2014). The purpose of this study is to understand how society influences entering healthy, romantic relationships and to understand how adolescents conceptualize a healthy, romantic relationship. Using both a survey and focus groups, data were collected from five adolescents who were members of a local Boys and Girls Club surrounding the implementation of the Love Notes curriculum. This study served to answer a) how society influences entering healthy, romantic relationships, b) what adolescents conceptualize to be a healthy, romantic relationship and c) discover if this conceptualization of healthy relationships changes from pre-focus group to post-focus group. Through the theory of Bronfenbrenner's Ecological Model, results found that adolescents are influenced regarding healthy, romantic relationships on a multitude of systemic, societal levels. These include peers, family, schools and social media. Furthermore, these results suggested that societal levels are influential both individually and by interacting together.
