Women in Muslim Rural Society - Joseph Ginat 2017-07-05

This study reassesses several accepted truths about Arab village society. It shows first that one cannot speak about the position of women in general, because there is a great difference among women depending on the structure of their households and relationships. Women whose work contributes to the family's income, who have been able to acquire property, who exert control over their sons, and who have the quickness of mind to exploit suitable opportunities, often have their way in the economic and political affairs of their households and beyond. Ginat's analysis of marriage patterns dispels the common notion that men customarily seek the hand of their father's brother's daughter, and that this type of marriage illustrates a principle of endogamy in Arab village society. After carefully examining the numerous reasons for each marriage, he concludes that a combination of material and political considerations of the families involved, and not stated norms, determines the choice of spouses. The author clarifies the notion of honor, which hitherto has been used to explain so many things in Arab society. In Arab societies a man's honor often seems to depend on the reputation of his women. Now it appears that his honor is gauged not by the actual sexual comportment of women for whom he is morally responsible, but by public attitudes towards that sexuality. Ginat's analysis adds to our understanding of some central themes in Arab society. He provides valuable and complete information about aspects of family life that have rarely been covered in such detail.

She placated him that he was forcing himself to her. After six months he found she was dating with another guy, Ronak, he knew him. When he asked she told they were just good friends but Ronak revealed that she had been dating with him for around two months. He was in dilemma what to do. She confessed that she had visited some places with him but as a friend, she apologised, they worked on their relationship and overcame the hurdles. Meanwhile Durvish wanted to marry Sanjana but she wanted a good job in hand before marriage. She was preparing for competitive exams. He had already told to his parents and they gave their consent to his relationship with Sanjana. When Sanjana told her parents about them, they immediately opposed and imposed restrictions on her, let alone any job they didn't allow her to talk to anyone whom they suspected as a common friend of them. Her parents went to Shruti, one of her cousin, she visited them frequently as she lived in Ajmer, and she was married to an NRI, who came once in a year to meet her or to have sex with her.
