But I Love Him - Jill Murray 2009-10-13

One in three girls will be in a controlling, abusive dating relationship before she graduates from high school – from verbal or emotional abuse to sexual abuse or physical battering. Is your daughter in danger? Dr. Jill Murray speaks on the topic of dating violence at high schools around the country, reaching more than 10,000 students, teachers, and counsellors each year. In every school she visits, she is approached by teenage girls in miserable relationships who, when confronted with the option of breaking up with the boy, exclaim, "But I love him!" Many young women – and their parents, aren't even aware of the indications of a potentially abusive relationship. What's most alarming is that these warning signs are also some of the behaviours that girls find most flattering: A boy pages and calls a girl often – but as a form of control, not affection. He wants to spend all his time with her, but eventually won't allow her to spend time with her friends. He says "I love you" very early in the relationship. These behaviours can escalate into blaming, isolating, manipulating, threatening, humiliation, and sexual and physical abuse. In But I Love Him, Dr. Murray identifies these controlling, abusive patterns of behaviour and helps you get your daughter out of the relationship without alienating her. You will learn what draws her to this type of relationship, why she has a hard time talking to you about it, the special barriers teens face when breaking off a relationship, and what's going on in the mind of a teen abuser. Dr. Murray will help you show your teen what a respectful relationship looks like, and teach her the importance of respecting herself. edition.

We can become confused if a man is verbally abusive towards us, but is not violent. Perhaps he is a decent and upright man in society and we reassure ourselves that because he is not violent, he must be okay - so we stay with him. The Earliest Warning Signs of Intimate Partner Violence - Stephanie C. Lang 2011

Despite considerable research on domestic violence (DV) in general, little is known about the very earliest stages of relationships that later become violent. This qualitative, grounded-theory study addresses that knowledge gap by exploring the earliest warning signs of intimate partner violence. It focuses on the time period from when participants first met their partner through one month after the relationship became exclusive-the time period when things usually seem wonderful and the foundation is established for the later relationship. The study included 12 participants (five male perpetrators, six female victims, and one gay male victim), but 16 cases: four participants (three female victims and one male victim) had recoupled into nonviolent relationships and were interviewed about those relationships to provide comparison cases. Participants were recruited from local programs for DV victims and perpetrators; they completed an extensive information packet, primary interviews, and follow-up interviews. The overriding research questions investigated were the following: What do participants perceive were early warning signs of abuse displayed by themselves and their partners? How were these rationalized away early in the relationship? and What do participants believe made them vulnerable to an abusive relationship? Interviews were transcribed, entered into NVivo for analysis, and within- and cross-case analyses were performed. A number of recurring themes were identified, including disrespectful as well as intensely positive behaviors and feelings, and similarities in early emotional, verbal, and sexual experiences. Participants rationalized away the warning signs through self-blame, partner-blame, and redirecting their focus onto seeing the relationship or behavior in the most positive light. The results were distilled into two conclusions. One is the Earliest Warning Signs of Intimate Partner Violence (EWS-IPV) model, which shows how the common EWS themes interact with each other and with the rationalizations and vulnerability or risk factors. The other is that, because warning signs depend so much on intensity and/or context, emotional awareness and being able to trust one's gut responses are critical in enabling individuals to recognize red flags.

Wired for Love - Stan Tatkin 2012-01-02

"What the heck is my partner thinking?" is a common refrain in romantic relationships, and with good reason. Every person is wired for love differently, with different habits, needs, and reactions to conflict. The good news is that most people's minds work in predictable ways and respond well to security, attachment, and rituals, making it possible to actually neurologically prime the brain for greater love and fewer conflicts. Wired for Love is a complete insider's guide to understanding a partner's brain and promoting love and trust within a romantic relationship. Readers learn ten scientific principles they can use to avoid triggering fear and panic in their partners, manage their partners' emotional reactions when they do become upset, and recognize when the brain's threat response is hindering their ability to act in a loving way. By learning to use simple gestures and words, readers can learn to put out emotional fires and help their partners feel more safe and secure. The no-fault view of conflict in this book encourages readers to move past a "warring brain" mentality and toward a more cooperative "loving brain" understanding of the relationship. Based in the sound science of neurobiology, attachment theory, and emotion regulation research, this book is essential reading for couples and others interested in understanding the complex dynamics at work behind love and trust in intimate relationships.

The Last Straw - Maria S Yan 2023-01-18

It is Not Due to Your Fault. You may experience feelings of confusion, fear, anger, and/or being imprisoned if your spouse is abusing you. Every one of these feelings is a natural reaction to being abused. There is also the possibility that you are to fault for what is occurring. No matter what other people may say, the fact remains that you are never to blame for the abusive behavior of your spouse. Abuse in a romantic relationship is almost usually the result of a conscious intention to cause hurt to the victim. Abuse in romantic relationships is not the result of drinking or drug use, stress, poor anger control, or being provoked. Abuse is a decision that is made by the one who does it.

Dragonslippers - Rosalind B. Penfold 2007-12-01

"In this deft, honest work, writer-illustrator Penfold documents how she traveled from successful businesswoman to abused wife and back again." —Publishers Weekly Rosalind B. Penfold is an appealing, successful thirty-five-year-old businesswoman running her own company when her parents, worried that she works too hard, invite her to a country picnic-party one weekend. There she meets widower Brian and is swept off her feet. Romantic and exuberant, with four loving children, Brian seems like everything a woman could possibly want, and Roz falls deeply in love. But soon Roz begins to notice troubling signs that Brian is not what he seems. A pattern of lies and petty cruelties begins to emerge that, over the course of their decade together, comes to encompass a litany of physical, mental, and sexual abuse appalling in its scope and malevolence. Often too traumatized and ashamed to admit the true extent of what she is experiencing, Roz instead pours her anguish into a series of graphic diaries that provide a touching, profoundly shocking, and completely original portrait of domestic abuse. An extraordinary visual testimony, Dragonslippers presents the many warning signs of abuse and offers a frank examination of the psychology of both abusers and victims. Above all, this is the story of a woman who fights for and finds the strength to break free.
