WebThe dynamic of pollen transfer in species with spatially segregated sexual organs also depends on the physical characteristics of the pol- linator. The size of pollinators influences whether a pollinator makes contact with the sexual organs during visitation (Armbruster, Keller, Matsuki, & Clausen, 1989). WebPollen Pollen is the male sperm of the plant very allergenic. Pollen is transferred from male to female parts of the flower usually by wind or by insects. Airborne pollen is particularly fine and is carried freely in the breeze. The pollen that's picked up and deposited by insects is generally stickier Your quick guide to: WebPollen is used for transferring genetic material from the anther (male part) of one flower to the stigma (female part) of another flower. Wind-pollinated plants rely on the wind to transport their pollen, which is inefficient. To ensure at least some of this pollen lands on the right stigmas, they produce billions of pollen grains. WebPOLLINATION Flowering plants reproduce sexually through a process called pollination. Insects and other pollinators are attracted by the flower's colourful petals and nectar and land on the flower. While they are there, pollen grains on the anthers stick to the insects' bodies and they fly off covered in pollen. WebIn June, the profichi (Plate 1, No. 1)—the capri figs of the spring generation—reach the male stage (D6) and liberate the pollen vectors (Blastophaga psenes) which develop in the ovaries of the short-styled female flowers [Fig. 2 (2)].
