Psychological Adjustment -

Jonathan F. Mattanah

2016-08-11

College Student Psychological Adjustment provides the reader an in-depth understanding of students' relationship experiences in college and how those experiences shape their adjustment to college. Each chapter examines research on one key relationship in a student's life to better understand how those relationships are re-worked during the college years and what factors help determine adaptive relational outcomes. Along the way, a number of controversial topics are considered from a scholarly perspective, including the effects of helicopter parenting on students' development in college, the prevalence and problematic nature of the hook-up culture on college campuses today, and policies related to whether students should be randomly assigned to live with their first-year roommates or be allowed to choose their roommates, based on a matching system. Aimed at advanced students and scholars in the fields of psychology, human development, and higher education, readers of this book will gain a fresh perspective on the relationship development of college students and possible avenues for intervention to help students enhance their relationships skills and prevent development of mental health difficulties.

Interpersonal Relationships and Health - Christopher Rolfe Agnew 2014

Gathering leading thinkers in social and clinical psychology, public health, medicine, and sociology, Interpersonal Relationships and Health considers theoretical and empirical issues relevant to understanding the social and clinical psychological mechanisms linking close relationship processes with mental and physical health outcomes. The volume arises out of a recent explosion of interest, across multiple academic and research fields, in the ways that interpersonal relationships affect health and well-being. This volume pulls together a range of scholars who focus on different aspects of relationships and health in order to encourage both collaboration and cross-disciplinary initiatives. This is the first edited volume to pull together noted experts across myriad disciplines whose research is at the intersection of human relationships and health. Topics addressed include key biological processes that influence and, in turn, are influenced by close relationships. Interpersonal Relationships and Health presents research that demonstrates the connections between interpersonal relationships, mental and physical health outcomes, and biophysical markers that figure prominently in the fields of psychoneuroimmunology, endocrinology, and cardiology. In addition, it highlights recent work on marital, family, and social relationships and their interplay with health and well-being. Chapters also address sexual health among young and older adults, as well as clinical intervention efforts that focus on the role of relational factors in influencing health. Each chapter highlights extant theoretical and empirical findings and suggests future avenues for research in this burgeoning area.

Insight and Personality Adjustment - Therese Benedek 1946

Sudden changes in the social scene, upheavals such as are wrought by economic depressions, by revolutions and by wars, lay bare for our observation the interaction between the individual and society. Impressed by the impact of the war upon the population--upon those who had to leave home to fight and upon those who remained civilians--the psychiatrist has found endless opportunities to study and to interpret the phenomena of human relationships. At this time of great effort toward reconversion to peace when individuals and the nation alike are trying to recapture the past, they struggle under the grave task of integrating the war into a victorious future. This is what psychiatry tries to do for the individual. And the aim of this book is to serve this purpose. It is rather a presentation of the basic dynamism of human relationships which, although changed and influenced by war-time experiences, lastingly motivates interpersonal relations. Thus, while always conscious of the general sociological atmosphere of the war as well as the post-war period, and always aware that the readjustment of the individual is highly dependent upon external realities, the author presents not so much the surface manifestations of readjustment, its trials and errors, but the emotional dynamism which is psychologically responsible for them. This book was written mainly for those whose professional task is to assist individuals in all walks of life during the years to come--while the imprint of war still shapes the life of all of us. It is designed particularly for social workers, clergymen, teachers, counselors, as well as for psychologists. Physicians, too, in the field of general medicine as well as in psychiatry, themselves veterans of the war, may find this volume useful in their reorientation to civilian practice.
