Handbook of Sexuality-Related Measures - Clive M. Davis 1998
 Fundamental to understanding human sexual expression is reliable and valid measurement and assessment. Many instruments have been developed to measure a myriad of sexuality-related states, traits, behaviors, and outcomes. Few are easily accessible and the information is limited concerning appropriate use and psychometric properties. In Handbook of Sexuality-Related Measures, more than 200 instruments are reproduced, accompanied by the necessary information for their use in research, as well as educational and clinical settings. Measures relating to more than 50 topics are included. Examples are abortion, aging, arousal, general and specific attitudes and behavior, contraception, dysfunctions, education, experience, gender identity, homosexuality, ideology, jealousy, knowledge, masturbation, orgasm, rape, and sexually transmitted diseases. Each chapter describes the development and appropriate use of each instrument, giving information on timing, scoring, and interpretation. Reliability and validity data are summarized and completely referenced. Nearly all articles include the entire instrument; others provide illustrative content from the instrument and give all necessary information to obtain the instrument.

Status of Sex Education in High Schools. Bulletin, 1922 - Newell W. Edson 1922

Few school principals or teachers of extended experience fail to realize the need among their pupils for some sort of instruction and guidance in matters pertaining to sex. Undoubtedly this realization has led to the many spontaneous attempts to introduce sex instruction into high schools. Experiments have sprung up all over the country, a few proved to be ineffective because they were undertaken by a teacher unsuited for the task. Most of them were successful enough to win approval of both school officials and the public. In January, 1920, the United States Bureau of Education and the United States Public Health Service sent out a questionnaire to obtain information regarding the status of sex instruction in the high schools of the United States. This questionnaire was sent to 12,025 accredited and partially accredited high schools and brought 6,488 (53.8 percent) replies. Its purposes were threefold: (1) To ascertain facts about the number and distribution of high schools giving sex instruction through the regular subjects of the curriculum; (2) to learn of the content and method of the parts of such school subjects as related to sex instruction and guidance; and (3) to discover the attitude of principals toward sex instruction in high schools. The schools from which replies were received fall naturally into three groups: (1) those schools giving emergency sex education i.e. through lectures, occasional talks, sex hygiene exhibits, pamphlets etc.; (2) those schools giving integrated sex education, i.e. incidentally in the subjects of the regular curriculum; and (3) those schools giving no sex education. Even though progress has been made in sex instruction in high schools and there are large numbers of principals favoring and undertaking it, principals would do well to continue to be cautious. The figures given should not perhaps be interpreted too literally. The best of questionnaires are difficult to interpret, and it is possible that some principals did not actually mean to imply that such definite instruction was being given as their answers would indicate. The Bureau of Education and the Public Health Service are following up the replies to these questionnaires in order to secure more exact information and further details about methods used. In this way experience of schools succeeding in such new and difficult work will be made available to others wishing to inaugurate new efforts in this direction and will furnish a sound basis for further developments in sex instruction. Hostile Hallways - 2001

This study investigates secondary school students' experiences of sexual harassment--and all the bullying, teasing, and touching it entails--and compares the results with those of the 1993 study "Hostile Hallways: The AAUW Survey on Sexual Harassment in America's Schools." Topics in the survey include students' knowledge and awareness of sexual harassment, personal experiences with sexual harassment in their school lives, and the emotional and behavioral impact of these experiences. A nationally representative sample of 2064 public school students in 8th through 11th grades was interviewed. Using self-administered questionnaires, 1559 students were surveyed during an English class, and 505 students were surveyed online. Students' answers were analyzed, where possible, to identify any difference by gender, race/ethnicity, grade level, and area of school. As in 1993, nearly all students say they know what sexual harassment is, and they provided their own definitions when asked. Major findings reveal the following: significant numbers of students are afraid of being hurt or bothered in their school lives; sexual harassment is widespread in school life; school sexual harassment has a negative impact on students' emotional and educational lives; students today are more likely than those in 1993 to say their schools have a policy or distribute literature on sexual harassment; nearly all students surveyed know what sexual harassment is; the most upsetting examples of sexual harassment in school life involve speech as well as actions; a sizeable minority of students reports high levels of sexual harassment in school; most experiences involve students harassing students, although many experiences involve school adults harassing students; and slightly more than half (54%) of students say they have sexually harassed someone during their school lives. Contains 29 figures and an afterword.

Appended is the research methodology with additional figures. (BT)
Sex Education Practices of Mothers and Fathers with Preschool Children - Shelley L. Knudsen-Lindauer 1979

This study examined the sex education practices of middle class parents with preschool children. Subjects were 128 parents of three- to five year-old children, including 37 mothers of daughters, 37 mothers of sons, 27 fathers of daughters, and 27 fathers of sons. These parents were administered a sex education questionnaire examining children's curiosity about genital differences, curiosity about birth and reproduction, use of obscene words, masturbation, and sex play. In each area, parents provided information about the frequency with which they observed the behavior, the manner in which they responded to the behavior, and the level of comfort they experienced in responding. Results indicated that the majority of parents had encountered questions about genital differences, questions about reproduction, and masturbation. Moreover, half of the sample had encountered obscene language and one quarter had observed sex play. Chi square analyses revealed that mothers and fathers were equally likely to have observed all five sexual behaviors. However, parents of sons were significantly more likely than parents of daughters to have observed masturbation. An examination of parents' responses to the various sexual behaviors revealed that parents provided more accurate information about genital sex differences to daughters than sons. Another notable finding was that the majority of parents failed to provide their children with an accurate description of reproduction and birth. Parents were most likely to ignore their children's masturbation, and to respond to obscene language with a negative sanction. Finally, the data revealed that parents felt quite comfortable in responding to children's sexual questions and behaviors. An analysis of variance performed on comfort ratings also revealed that parents of sons experienced more comfort than parents of daughters in responding to children's questions about genital differences and reproduction. The implications of current findings for sex education programs were discussed.

Let's Talk about Sex Education and Perceptions Based on Sexual Orientation/gender Identity - Paola Pamela Cervantes 2020

Purpose: The purpose of this study was to examine how sexual orientation/gender identity related to perceptions of school-based sex education in high school within the United States. Methods: Researcher conducted an online survey questionnaire that contained sixty-nine questions that measured perceptions of sex education within public high schools in the United States, and opinions about school-based sex education. Results: The study consisted of 111 participants, with participants identifying as Heterosexual adults (n=87), and LGBQ (n=24). The study intended to also look into gender identity with Woman (n=103), Man (n=7), and Non-binary (n=1). Discussion: School-based sex education in high schools in the United States has shown to be inadequate for both Heterosexual adults and LGB adults. Sex education further excludes content of LGBQ people, which further stigmatizes Queer identities. These results can help aid how sex education can improve in the United States to further educate students regardless of sexual orientation and gender identity.

The Status of Family Life/sex Education in the Public High Schools of Oregon - Howard Sadanobu Ishisaka 1972

The major purpose of this study was to determine the current status of family life/sex education programs in the public high schools of Oregon. A mail questionnaire was submitted to all health teachers in all the high schools in Oregon. The questionnaire was mailed twice to 447 health teachers in Oregon. The sample involved 192 high schools and 139 school districts. The mailing procedure included a stamped self-addressed return envelope. The cover letter which accompanied the questionnaire explained the purpose of the study and assured anonymity to the respondents. The questionnaire replies concerning the family life/sex education programs in the Oregon High Schools were analyzed according to questionnaire items such as the: age of teacher, size of participating school, and geographic areas where the program was found, etc. The total questionnaire responses by item, rankings and percentage comparisons were made and these were presented in tabular form. Collective responses were analyzed and correlated whenever significant to yield illuminating facts, figures, and relationships. Lastly, the findings are discussed in reference to expert opinion, prevailing practice, and accepted standards. Three hundred thirty five or 74.9 percent of the potential respondents returned the completed questionnaires. The overall results were excellent, since this was a voluntary survey conducted during great controversy about family life/sex education programs. Some of the findings of this study are summarized in the following paragraphs. The most popular grade for teaching family life/sex education was the tenth grade. A majority of the correlated family life/sex education courses were short and fragmentary in content. Likewise, a majority of 76.3 percent of the study participants indicated that family life/sex education was included in one or more curriculum areas, but not as a separate course. Health education was ranked number one by study participants as the most frequent discipline which included the subject family life/sex education in the State of Oregon. The five most frequently taught topics in rank order were: 1) reproduction (female's role); 2) dating; 3) reproduction (male's role); 4) infection; and 5) interpersonal relationships. Twenty-six percent of the respondents disclosed that all their students were required to take their family life/sex education. There were no community objections to the nonrequired courses. The most popular pattern for attendance for the nonrequired programs was as an elective subject. Family life/sex education teachers most frequently characterized their programs as "mostly development of attitudes." Also, the most frequently checked course, by respondents was those 3-4 weeks in length. Less than a majority or 39.1 percent, of the respondents indicated they offered a family life/sex education program, which was co-educational. The majority of respondents had used resource personnel in their programs. The top three ranked individuals by frequency of use as resource personnel were: 1) doctors, 2) nurses, and 3) ministers. The three most interested individuals responsible for initiating a family life/sex education program at the high school level in rank order by frequency were: 1) teacher, 2) administrator and 3) student.

A Needs Assessment for a Sex Education Curriculum in the Public School System - Dorothy Patricia Cooper 1989

A survey questionnaire was developed to determine which sex education concepts should be taught in a school district. The survey detailed 21 sex education concepts, the grade level at which these concepts should be introduced, and a section for relevant comments. Surveys were sent to over 2100 residences and almost the same number were sent to parents of school children.

What are the Attitudes of a Group of Minority Adolescents Toward Sex Education? - Joan M. Foster 1998

The purpose of this study was- to explore minority adolescents' attitudes towards sex education. The study group participants were twenty-six African-American youths and four Hispanic youths involved in a church youth group. All the subjects lived at home with parents and were attending college, high school or working. The ages of the subjects ranged from 18-22 years (mean average, 19.1). The subjects reported having some previous knowledge about sex obtained from parents, peers or formal sex education programs. A two-part questionnaire with ten items each was used to survey the group's attitudes about sex education. The first questionnaire focused on the attitudes of sex education in the schools and the second questionnaire examined the timing, content and age appropriateness of sex education to begin with the young child. The results of this study was that there was no significant differences found in attitudes among the group based on gender in regard to the content and timing of sex education. There was no significant difference based on gender on the subject of sex education in schools among the group either. There was a significant difference in the score on the attitudes on content and timing of sex education among the group based on education. The college student scored higher than the high school student and the working adolescent, who scored lower than both the college student and the high school student. The implication is that the lesser education one receives, the more conservative his or her attitudes are about the content and timing of sex education. This research provided insight into the attitudes of 30 minority adolescents towards the content and timing of sex education and sex education given in the schools. Taken as whole, the data revealed that adolescents perceive sex education in schools critical to their overall sexual health and it is as important as the learning the basic academic skills in schools. Recommendations for further studies should include exploring the timing of sex education as well as the implementation of programs that integrate knowledge of one's body with sex education.

Health consequences of sexuality education on selected secondary school adolescents - Blessing Adegoke 2011-09-26

Scientific Study from the year 2010 in the subject Sociology - Children and Youth, grade: 1.0, Bowdoin College, language: English, abstract: This study was designed to examine the health consequences of sexuality education among senior secondary school adolescent in select school in Epe Area of Lagos State. It was five chapters, thorough and well researched project work. Each of the chapters of the study work contained a new and fresh information on the study. The chapter one of the study examined the introductory part as in statement of the problem, objectives of the study, research questions, hypotheses, delimitation, limitation and scope of the study. In chapter two, related and relevant topics to the study were reviewed to serve as theoretical framework to the study. The chapter three was succulently written to discuss the methods and procedures adopted in the course of conducting the study it also revealed the research instrument used, how it was administrated and analysed, were also discussed. A total number of seven hundred were randomly selected as sample for the study, having used eight senior secondary school adolescent in Epe area of Lagos State. The chapter four was analytically and descriptively written to present the data sourced through the use of questionnaire for analysis and hypothesis testing. The findings, showed that the respondents had adequate knowledge about sexuality education and its health consequences, was attributed to the various campaigns being mounted by government and non-governments organisation and by extension, the respondents exhibited some positive sexual behaviours.

Impact of a Sex Education Workshop on Mothers' Responses to Children's Sexual Questions and Behaviors - Shari Davis 1982

This study examined the impact of a Sex Education Workshop on mothers' responses to their children's sexual questions and behaviors. Subjects included 88 mothers equally divided into experimental and control groups. Experimental and control groups consisted of an equal number of mothers from high and low socioeconomic levels.

Furthermore, an equal number of mothers with preschool boys and girls were represented in the groups. A modified version of the Sex Education Questionnaire was used to assess mothers' plans, comfort level, ability and frequency in responding to their children's sexual questions and behaviors. A pre-/posttest design with a 1-month interval between testings was utilized. Data were analyzed using analysis of covariance, Bonferroni  $t$ , and chi-square. Findings obtained revealed that a 2-hour Sex Education Workshop focused on assisting mothers in responding to their preschool children's sexual questions and behaviors can lead them to (a) plan discussing a variety of age-appropriate sexual topics with their preschool children, (b) contribute to their abilities in responding to their preschool children's sexual curiosity, and (c) although less markedly, increase the frequency with which they discussed a variety of age-appropriate sexual topics with their preschool children. With respect to mothers' comfort level in responding to their children's sexual curiosity, the Sex Education Workshop appeared to have no significant impact. This may have been due to the relatively high comfort level scores of mothers prior to the experiment. However, questions can be raised about the adequacy of the comfort measure used in this study. In reference to the socioeconomic level and sex of child variables studied, results obtained provided some significant information regarding their main and interaction effects. However, examination of their effects revealed no clear-cut or consistent patterns. Their impact appeared at points to be related not only to each other but also to the variables of groups, types of sexual topics studied, and kinds of mothers' responses examined. The complex nature of these interactions made interpretation of data difficult. However, their significance cannot be overlooked in understanding the role of parents as sex educators of their children.

Young People's Views on Sex Education - Dr Lynda Measor 2012-11-12

Based on observation of sex education programmes and in-depth interviews with young people, the authors aim to understand more about adolescent's attitudes to sexuality and their sexual behaviour in order to develop policies which will meet their needs more appropriately and effectively. Issues covered in this interesting and accessible book include the ways adolescent informal culture affects sex education programmes and practice; the impact of gender inequality on sex education and safer sex behaviours; legislation and policy frameworks which effect sex education policies; the way young people see legislation and evaluate sex education programmes; and the impact health professionals can have in school sex education. The authors contend that the insights into the values and views that young people bring to bear on the sex education they receive should have an important role to play in the development of policy and practice of those involved in sex education work.
