The Filipino Youth - 2003

"Adolescents and young adults, who comprise a significant portion of Philippine society, are known to be prone to particular types of risks. Some speculate that societies with large proportions of young people may be subjected to dynamic, and potentially disruptive, political and social movements. The rapid growth of the youth population too, creates pressure on the state to expand education, health, and employment programs for this age group. Policymakers must keep in mind, however, that the period of expansion for government to cope with the needs of large numbers of youth is short. For efficient plans and programs, there is a need to know not just the number of youths to which the services shall be delivered, but also where they are and who they are. This paper, therefore, presents a profile of the youth. Following UN practice, the youth is defined as the 15 to 24 year age group"--P. 1.

Ageing in ASEAN - Chen Ai Ju 1989
This book presents the key findings of studies done under the ASEAN Phase III Population Project, Socio-Economic Consequences of the Ageing of the Population in Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, and Thailand. It begins by outlining the demographic background to the ageing process in these countries and a projection of the situation of ageing into the future. It examines the profile of the aged and gives a brief overview of the living arrangements of the elderly, their employment, financial support, and health care, and the role played by their children in old age security. It then goes on to describe the services provided at the national and local levels by government and private agencies and gives an evaluation of the role and contribution of the aged in the community. The book ends with a discussion on the social and policy implications of ageing in each of the participating countries.
