The laboratory course should do more than just acquaint the students with fundamental techniques and procedures. The laboratory experience should also involve the students in some of the kinds of mental activities a research scientist employs: finding patterns in data, developing mathematical analyses for them, forming hypotheses, testing hypotheses, debating with colleagues and designing experiments to prove a point. For this reason, the student-tested lab activities in Inquiries into Chemistry, 3/E have been designed so that students can practice these mental activities while building knowledge of the specific subject area. Instructors will enjoy the flexibility this text affords. They can select from a comprehensive collection of structured, guided-inquiry experiments and a corresponding collection of open-inquiry experiments, depending on their perception as to what would be the most appropriate method of instruction for their students. Both approaches were developed to encourage students to think logically and independently, to refine their mental models, and to allow students to have an experience that more closely reflects what occurs in actual scientific research. Thoroughly illustrated appendices cover safety in the lab, common equipment, and procedures.

The Teaching of Science in Public High Schools - Philip Gustaf Johnson 1950
This study reports enrollments in general science, biology, chemistry, and physics in public high schools, the additional science offerings, the number of teachers serving these pupils, class size, grade placement of science subjects, time allotments for recitation and laboratory, and troublesome problems related to the teaching of science. The findings are based on data collected for the school year 1947-48. These data were provided by teachers or administrators in a sampling of the Nation's public high schools. The sample, including 755, or 3.15 percent, of the 23,947 public high schools, Negro and white, was a stratified random sample in which the schools were selected according to size and type of school. Of the 755 public high schools, 715, or 94.7 percent, provided information which was used for the purposes of the study. These included 34 schools which provided information included in all but a few sections of the study. There were 18 schools, or 2.4 percent, reported as dropped from the list of high schools through consolidations or other administrative changes. Only 22 schools, or 2.9 percent, failed to respond. The 733 schools that responded constituted 3.06 percent of the public high schools of the United States, and the schools that reported usable data constituted 2.99 percent of the Nation's public high schools. (Contains 32 tables and 4 footnotes.) [Translation of data for this study was done in Research and Statistical Service under the supervision of Robert C. Story. Best copy available has been provided.].

Low's book is a seminal work in the field of chemistry, offering a detailed analysis of the fundamental components of matter. Through a mix of theoretical analysis and empirical observation, Low provides insights into the chemical structure of atoms, molecules, and other basic units, laying the groundwork for modern chemistry as we know it today. This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally important, and is part of the knowledge base of civilization as we know it. This work is in the "public domain in the United States of America, and possibly other nations.
