The new edition of the annual indispensable reference book for everyone who has experienced housing problems. Relationship breakdown is increasing as evidenced in statistics of around 150,000 couples divorcing each year, and this does not even take into account the breakup of cohabiting couples. This survey looks at the impact of changing patterns of family life on social and housing policy, with special emphasis on local authority housing. Tenure, violence, the presence of children and marital status are inter-related key factors influencing housing consequences. All policy makers, local authorities, housing associations and agencies should consider the findings.

Social Work and Housing - Gillian Stewart 1993

Social Work and Housing, written for students and practising social workers, examines an important but hitherto neglected area. Based on analyses of real cases, the book develops understanding of clients' housing circumstances and shows what positive help social workers can provide by integrating the knowledge and skills required with policy and practice analysis. The authors, placing their analysis in the context of feminist and class issues, examine difficulties caused by the condition of housing, its effect on health, the breakdown of relationships between household members and the stigmatisation of clients because of where they live. 'A welcome book in a very neglected area of social work' - Probation Journal

The Housing Consequences of Relationship Breakdown - Julie Bull 1995Relationship Breakdown and Housing Executive Tenancies - Housing Rights Service 1998*Barlow's Cohabitants and the Law* - David Josiah-Lake 2018

"As the number of couples choosing to live together (and not to marry) is on the rise, it is essential that access to what their legal rights and obligations are is readily available. The fourth edition of Barlow's Cohabitants and the Law provides a wealth of both new and updated information on important issues affecting cohabiting couples such as cohabitation agreements, disputes in relation to children, the family home and tax and social security. Part I focuses on the ongoing relationship and Part II with relationship breakdown. There have been significant legislative, procedural and case law developments since the publication of the third edition in all of the key areas of family, child, land and trust law that impact on cohabiting couples in much the same way as married couples, eg: New child maintenance regulations (CMS) Family Procedure Rules 2010 Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 2008 Adoption and Children Act 2002 Stack v Dowden [2007] UKHL 17, [2007] 2 ALL ER 929 Jones v Kernott [2011] UKSC 53, [2012] 1 AC 776; and Bhurra v Bhurra [2014] EWHC 727, [2014] All ER (D) 213 (Mar) Mention is also be made of EU jurisdiction distinctions/differences. The practical stance of the work is enhanced by a precedents and checklist section, and the provision of a number of 'at a glance' comparative tables setting out the rights of cohabitants, married couples and civil partners in relation to property and housing, financial provision following breakdown of the relationship, child maintenance, death, pensions and more."--Bloomsbury Publishing.
