Willingness to Use Female Condom by College Students in Ethiopia: - Dayan Aragu 2011-12

Condoms are an integral part of STD and HIV/AIDS prevention. Until recently, the only condom available to women in the world has been the male condom. Currently available method of dual protection that woman can initiate, female condoms offer an important alternative to male condoms. Given the high rates of unprotected sexual activity among youth and the need to develop effective intervention programs, it is critical to examine why female condom use is not popular. This book, therefore, provide important information for the concerned body (both governmental and nongovernmental organization) to plan important intervention to improve the service provision and to achieve changes in the service utilization.

Acceptability and Accessibility of the Female Condom in Kenya - Japheth Mativo Nzioki 2012

Available literature indicates that the history of condoms goes back several centuries ago. For most of their history, condoms have been used both as a method of birth control, and as a protective measure against sexually transmitted diseases. Condoms have been made from a variety of materials; prior to the 19th century, chemically treated linen and animal tissue (intestine or bladder) are the best documented varieties. Rubber condoms gained popularity in the mid-19th century, and in the early 20th century major advances were made in manufacturing techniques. Advocacy of the female condom emerged in the context of growing evidence that heterosexual intercourse was placing women at increased risk of HIV infection. Acceptability of the Female Condom in developing countries remains a controversial issue with little or no evidence on utilization of this device by Women of reproductive age. This publication explores utilization, perceptions and factors that influence acceptability and accessibility of the Female Condom in Kiambu County in Kenya.

Factors Contributing to Low Uptake of the Female Condom in Palapye - Muya Kanyinda
2015-04-14

Female condoms help curb the spread of HIV/ AIDS/ STIs and unwanted pregnancy only if they are used correctly and consistently. As this study revealed poor use of female condoms and shortages of programs to promote female condom usage, efforts to increase the public provision of female condoms must be supported by behaviour change communication strategies for safer sex. Though female condom may not be the preferred method for the majority of women in Palapye, with access, proper education, and promotion they may be a precious option for some women. Since condoms are also associated in many contexts with illicit or extra-marital sex, married women are often powerless to request their partner to wear a condom despite suspecting that he may be infected with HIV, for fear of reprisal at the implied accusation of being unfaithful.

This research and other researches conducted in a diverse range of countries have found that women avoid asking their partner to wear a condom for fear of violent response or accusations of her own suspected infidelity. Though, majority of participants reported that their religion/culture didn't have much influence but women are not empowered in sex matters incorporate the female condom in a range of different settings. It is based on real experiences from projects from all over the world. Because the female condom is still a relatively new method, the way in which it is introduced is essential to its acceptance by policy-makers, programme managers, service providers, non-governmental organizations and potential users.

The Power to Protect - Rachel Cassidy 2020

Women may face systematically greater benefits than men from adopting certain technologies. Yet women often hold lower bargaining power, meaning that men's preferences may constrain household adoption when decisions are joint. When low female bargaining power constrains adoption of the first-best technology, introducing a version of the technology that is second-best in terms of cost or effectiveness, but more acceptable to men, may increase adoption and welfare. This paper contributes the first explicit model and test of the trade-offs when introducing a second-best technology in such a setting. We conduct a field experiment introducing female condoms - which are less effective and more expensive than male condoms, but often preferred by men - in an area with high HIV prevalence. We observe an increase in the likelihood that women have sex and find strongest adoption of female condoms among women with lower bargaining power, who were previously having
